

In association with the Southern Rangelands Pastoral Alliance the College of Extension is delivering its Rural Growth Program for the Australian and State Government supported Farm Business Resilience Program in the Southern Rangelands and the Midwest.

The program takes pastoralists and other participants through a facilitated process, to better enable strategic management and prepare for and manage risk, adapt to a changing climate, and improve the economic, environmental and social resilience of the business – through four modules over two workshops that run for two days. Rural Growth will focus on the day to day, seasonal and year to year planning of pastoralists, with the aim of producing a longer term strategic plan and explore how to enable and fund the plan.

*Scan the QR to find out from pastoralists Grant and Wendy Brooks of Limestone Station and other Mid West producers about what they got out of participating in a previous delivery of the Rural Growth – Farm Business Resilience program.*

Our next face to face workshops are scheduled for March and April 2026 in the Gascoyne (Carnarvon), Murchison (Geraldton), North East Goldfields and Nullarbor regions

Who should attend?

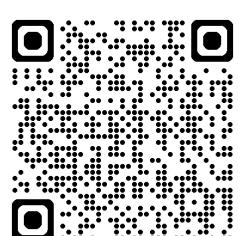

- Pastoralists, related livestock operations, their families and associated supporters
- The next generation of pastoralists Businesses needing to update a previous Strategic, Operational or Business Plan

How much does it cost?

- The Australian and WA Governments funds two participants per business ($10,000 in value)
- A co-contribution of $500 is required (sponsored places are available)
- Supported places for the $500 are available for those completing the program (i.e. a full refund of course fee) – ask about additional participants from each business
